Do Your Customers Feel Valued?

01 The Value of Outstanding Customer Service
02 Building Rapport
03 Exceeding Expectations
04 Solving Problems
Providing outstanding customer service requires us to see things from the customers’ perspective. This isn’t always easy to do. It’s natural for customers and customer service employees to see things a bit differently.
Why do you lose customers?

Customers are turned away by an attitude of indifference. 68%

Rapport equals trust plus comfort.
-Neil Strauss

This involves creating a personal connection with the other person and hopefully getting them to know you and like you.
To go the extra mile, we must adopt the extra mile mindset which will help us identify opportunities. We need to take action once we see those opportunities.
Customer Service Foundations

Solve Problems

Taking ownership is one of the most important problem solving skills in customer service. It involves accepting responsibility for finding a resolution even if it means putting in extra effort and navigating around obstacles that get in the way.
